Home Block homeboys and homegirls would be a thing if vineyards had some street cred.

This is delicious. Whip crack fresh, electric in the pulse of saline minerality at its core, lemon-lime in fresh fruit, curd, preserved things, a lick of hazelnut, dried apple, brown pear and just-on-cusp-of-ripeness nectarine. It sizzles in a way some rieslings do then slips around that a softness and suppleness. It feels decidedly modern and clean, and then my mind went to when I first tasted 'great' Chablis some fifteen to twenty years ago and I had some special moments. The filing cabinet opened with all the minerals, all the crispness, all the skeletal raciness and then that sense of sluice, a washing of chardonnay over the rocks, a lingering salinity, a kiss of wood, a pristiness and the promise of delight.
