Wild fermented and matured in clay amphora. As the name of the wine suggests. Never resting on laurels for the one percenters at Neudorf. And of course the vessel is only part of a wine's potential, but here seems to give that desired x-factor. This is a dreamy chardonnay. It packs in flavour and then lathes it back with terracotta texture and grip. A plush and supple core of lightweight peach juice, nectarine slurps and faint green almond notes given shape and minerally pucker. Yes thanks. The perfume is somewhat mute but does deliver information and enticement in lemon blossom, lemongrass and some sugared almond notes. Just so. The finish of the wine is notably moreish, ticklish with briny minerality, lip-smackingly refreshing. Invigoratingly cool chardonnay, in the copacetic sense.
